Human society is only a herd of beasts, if it is not founded on justice. In the jungle, the strong prey upon the weak, and the panther devours the antelope. Justice is the glory of man and his civilization. Justice gives everyone his due. She is the parent of peace and harmony. She weans mankind from strife and rapine. She spurs all to work and worth, as she promises the proper reward for all. She is the guardian of organized society, its surest defence and rampart against disorder and violence. Love of justice is a cardinal virtue that you must cultivate to the highest possible degree you should try to give everyone what is due to him, Alas! Injustice is so rampant around us that all lovers of justice have to fight an uphill fight every day. Our civilization is based on injustice. Our institutions are reared on the unsafe and slippery foundation of injustice. We are like the sailors who landed and cooked their food on what they supposed was terra firma, but they were really on the back of a whale, which soon began to move and swim. All our states, churches are vast edifices built upon injustice, they are cemented with injustice, they are painted and decorated with injustice, they are lighted and heated with injustice; they are massive memorials and monuments of the inherited, unashamed, unchallenged universal injustice which rules and reigns over the whole earth today. Hence love of justice will make you a stranger and an alien in this rotten society; but you must not be afraid of that.

Questions:

- 1) What makes the writer think human society a herd of cruel animals?
- 2) How does justice inspire people to work?
- 3) What is the chief virtue and why?
- 4) Why has a lover of justice to fight?
- 5) What makes us a stranger in the Modern World?
